

YES, IT WAS RAPE.

In the 14th of July, after two appeals regarding the rape of a 50 year old woman, the judges decided that the punishment given by a lower court was too severe for the perpetrators' action, and reduced their sentences.

Through creative additions and subtractions they concluded that rape can be measured with accounting tricks and the sentences can vary based on the origin of perpetrator and survivor of said act, as well as their age

—if not too old or too young, it's not as much of a rape—, whether a gun was used—as if the violence embodied in the act is not enough—, if the survivor of this act ended up at a mental health hospital or not.

Three years ago yet another woman experienced rape. That was only one among thousand cases, and one of the few where the survivor had the power to report the aggressors publicly. Because even the fact that most rape cases go unreported speaks volumes about the patriarchal society we live in. That she was a migrant also makes her more vulnerable.

Rape culture was always part of the Cypriot day-to-day life. We experience it when we have to walk alone at night and feel the need to hide our bodies, when our boss at the workplace lays his authoritative gaze on us, when our partners feel like they can make decisions for us, and demand that we dress more modestly so that we don't provoke, or even when we want to talk about something but no-one wants to pay attention because we are “too cute”, because apparently we only exist for the beauty pageants, because we are sluts, ugly, fat... Our gender “sadly” prevents you from listening to us.

Church and public institutions reproduce and reinforce patriarchy, transmitting it from one generation to the next. Men make up Mankind, and women are just complimentary. An object belonging to a man, and he, as the appropriate owner and master can decide for that object. It is this belief system that gives men the right to think that female bodies exist to please their sexual and other wishes, without those “bodies” having the right to decide for themselves.

We, women though, are here to react and resist. To tell you that our bodies are not your property. And if you think that this is a given, think back to the number of times you felt that you have the right to decide how a woman dresses, with who and how many people she can engage sexuality, and under which circumstances. Or whether she has the right to stop a pregnancy taking place inside her body. Rape, that now seems heinous to you, is not an act that only takes place in dark alleys, perpetrated by “monsters”. It was also rape when the men we married forced us to have sex whenever and however he wanted because we didn't have the right to say “no”. It was rape again when our “best friend” that we trusted to take us home when we were drunk decided to pin us down on the bed. It was rape when our boss at work said to us that we need to be more polite and to not react when they touch us, and then demanded from us to have sex with them under threat of sending us back to the country we left in search for a better life. Yes, it WAS rape. Because very simply put, rape is when you cannot freely say YES.

All the things you will hear then: why did you have to hitch-hike? Why did you drink? Why did you walk alone? Why did you marry him? Why did you dress like that? Why didn't you realise you are not in control of your own body? Why didn't you realise that others control it? We are here today for a woman who lived through a gang-rape, and then another rape in the court of law, when she had to be examined and counter-examined so that the “proof” of the rape taking place is established, and when the supreme court decided that in the end “it wasn't that much of a rape”. YES, it was that much of a rape. Because every rape is that much of a rape. Every attempt at minimalising the subject is simply the result of your belief that you get to decide which bodies matter, and how much they do.

We claim our bodies back. So that we get to say “No” when you demand that we are more polite when violated, to tolerate the gaze and the body policing that puts us under the lens of patriarchy that finds us too attractive, or not attractive enough, or too “available”. No, we are not going to tolerate rape culture. We are here to remind you what violation and rape are, even if you think it's common knowledge.

18th of July, 2016
Nicosia

Syspirosi Atakton

syspirosiatakton.org

We consider ourselves as part of a wider anarchist, anti-authoritarian movement willing to deconstruct and undermine the structural forms of the current socio-political system and put into practice alternative forms of socio-political organisation. Based on our local experience we are participating to an international anti-authoritarian network, trying to circulate the ideas of self-organization, self-legislation and solidarity.